A new coagulometer, the CoaguCheck, which measures activated partial thromboplastin time (APTT) by mixing test plasma with predetermined amounts of various inducers of coagulation factors and assessing the rate at which a plasma thromboplastin inhibitor is added to the plasma mixture, was compared with standard coagulometry in the monitoring of oral anticoagulation treatment in consecutive patients with a target international normalized ratio (INR) of 1.5 to 3.0. APTT values obtained in plasma samples from 207 patients with a variety of indications for anticoagulation were used for the comparison. Patients were randomly assigned to either the CoaguCheck (n = 103) or the standard coagulation method (n = 104). Patients were followed for 2 weeks or until treatment was changed. Although patients in the two groups were well matched, use of the CoaguCheck reduced significantly the variability and the time required for the determination of APTT and INR compared with standard coagulometry. Data of all patients were compared with the 90th percentile of the normal CoaguCheck APTT values
